
International Workshop of the Amdo Research Network

International Workshop of the Amdo Research Network

Prague, January 29-31, 2017

WORKSHOP PROGRAMME

International Workshop

Dynamics of Power: Political, Sociocultural Economic Structures in Past & Present

Prague, 29th-31st of January 2017

Following the fruitful workshop of the Amdo Research Network hosted by Humboldt University of Berlin in 2014 we are happy to announce the 2nd International Workshop of the Amdo Research Network to be held in Prague in 2017.

DATE: The second ARN workshop will be held in Prague, January 29–31, 2017.

VENUE: Faculty of Arts, Charles University in Prague
(nam. Jana Palacha 2, 116 38 Praha 1)
located in the historic center of Prague.
(metro station Staroměstská, line A)

Getting there from Vila Lanna (see below):

Walk to the Hradčanská metro station (map), take the metro (direction Depo Hostivař) and get off at the second stop - Staroměstská. It is just next to Faculty of Arts. Prague metro plan

LODGING: Accommodation for presenters will be provided for free at the following address: Vila Lanna , V Sadech 1, 160 00 Praha 6 - Bubeneč.
(metro station Hradčanská, line A) map

Getting there from airport:

Take the bus no. 119 from the Vaclav Havel Airport to the terminus - Nádraží Veleslavín. Change for metro there and get off at the third stop - Hradčanská.

Follow the map , it is 10 minutes walk from the Hradčanská station.

Please, contact us with any question using the following e-mail: amdoworkshop2017@outlook.com

AMDO RESEARCH NETWORK

Amdo,

one of the three main Tibetan regions, comprises the northeastern sector of the Tibetan Plateau. Amdo mainly falls within the current Chinese administrative unit of Qinghai Province, the majority of which is composed of Tibetan Autonomous Prefectures. Parts of Amdo are also located in the current Sichuan and Gansu Provinces. Premodern Amdo was characterized by high ethnic diversity, unique cultural aspects, and its own major dialect of oral Tibetan. Since the 1950s, modern Amdo Tibetans have experienced large-scale transformations in social, socio-economic and cultural aspects of life, primarily driven by Chinese state development efforts. Amdo's position in China's far West makes it a target for state programs for rural development. Additionally, the most important rivers of China all have their sources on the Amdo-Qinghai Plateau, making the region of special environmental interest for the state. During the past two decades, the number of researchers working in Amdo has gradually increased, yet information about individual or group projects and networking between researchers has remained underdeveloped.

The Amdo Research Network was established to connect national and international scholars and other interested parties who share common research interests in this region. Its aim is to serve as a platform for exchange and comparison of research project information and published results, and to facilitate easier establishment of research collaborations. The Amdo Research Network is based at the Humboldt University of Berlin, within the Tibetan Studies program of the Central-Asian Seminar, which has a strong focus on the Amdo area in terms of formal language training, teaching and affiliated researchers.

(For the Humboldt University website see AMDO RESEARCH NETWORK , the program of the Berlin workshop is here)